FEDERAL AGENTS
CHECK OWNERSHIP
OF CHEMICAL PLANT*Seize Ruins of Plant Wrecked
by Fire and Explosions*BLAZE RAZES BUILDINGS*Indications Point to Large Redistilling Operation Carried On

CORNWELLS HEIGHTS, Oct. 30.—Federal authorities are today checking up the ownership of the Organic Salvage Chemical Company whose buildings and equipment were reduced to wreckage early yesterday morning by explosions followed by fire.

State Police and Bucks County Detective Russo along with Bucks County Fire Marshal William L. Stackhouse, made preliminary investigations and then called in the Federal men.

It is believed that a small fire started early yesterday morning and that the five or six men working in the place at that time, tried to fight the flames. This is indicated by the fact that one of the hand extinguishers was found out of its rack and partly used.

It is believed that the men, after finding that they could not subdue the flames, then took to their heels and disappeared. It is almost certain that no one was hurt in the explosions. Several lunches were found about the premises, indicating that the men had been working all night.

Federal agents describe the plant as a complete denatured alcohol distilling plant. They estimated the capacity of the stills at 7500 gallons per day. Fifty-eight 5-gallon cans filled with alcohol were found about the place. This had been treated, it is said, by the Government formula, C. D. 5.

Officials in the Bureau of Industrial Alcohol, under Colonel Samuel O. Wynne, and the Bureau of Prohibition, under Commander John D. Pennington, began an immediate investigation into the ownership of the chemical concern.

Colonel Wynne pointed out that the firm had three stills registered with his bureau for use in manufacturing a dry-cleaning fluid, but had no permit to have alcohol on its premises. No permit is necessary for the denatured alcohol, he said.

Two trucks were found at the plant, one owned by a Philadelphian and the other bearing the name Salvage Chemical Company. Investigators reported that the firm did an extensive business in paint-removing and dry-cleaning fluids, but declared indications were that the main business was in the redistillation of denatured alcohol for illegal purposes.

The rooms were tastefully decorated with cut flowers and Halloween decorations. A large birthday cake with candles was the centerpiece on the table and each guest received a basket filled with candy, as a favor. After enjoying refreshments, the guests departed for their respective homes.

WARN OF RACKET
BEING WORKED HERE*Police Caution Business Men
Not to Be Victims of It*ONE MAN GIVES $25.00

Merchants of Bristol and throughout Bucks County are warned not to subscribe for magazines or advertisements in magazines, without first making a most careful and thorough investigation.

The warning is issued by Chief of Police, Linford J. Jones and Bucks County Detective Antonio Russo.

Bristol business men have recently been solicited first by telephone and then personally. The telephone solicitor represents himself to be a prominent citizen of a nearby city and intimates that if the object of his quest subscribes to the project, that aid will be given in case the business man should at any time become involved in difficulty with the police.

One Bristol business man subscribed $25 to the project and then became suspicious and called in the police.

After the business man had subscribed $25 he was called a second time on the telephone and requested to make a donation to the present political campaign.

The project is frowned upon by the authorities and merchants are cautioned not to be victims of it.

BRISTOL MAN WINS SUIT
IN ASSUMPSIT ACTION*M. J. Hill Awarded Verdict of $574.78 and Costs at
Doylestown*TRIED BY JUDGE BOYER

DOYLESTOWN, Oct. 30.—In Court No. 2 in a case before Judge Calvin S. Boyer, Minor J. Hill, of Bristol, was awarded a verdict of $574.78 and costs in a suit against Eisenberg & Sons Inc.

It was an action in assumpsit. The plaintiff was represented by Hugh B. Eastburn, of Bristol, and the defendant by Henry A. James, Doylestown.

In the case of the Corn Exchange National Bank and Trust Company, of Philadelphia, against Russell W. Armstrong, an action in assumpsit, the defendant confessed judgment in the sum of $2,000 and costs. The plaintiff was represented by H. B. Eastburn, of Bristol and Charles J. Biddle, and the defendant by Vanartsdalen and Blesster, Doylestown.

Deliberating less than two hours, a jury in civil court returned a verdict in favor of the defendant in the damage case of Joseph Slotter, nine, of Doylestown, against James M. Miller, of Philadelphia.

This verdict followed two motions made by defense counsel to have the Court declare a voluntary non-suit on grounds the plaintiff had failed to prove the defendant negligent in any manner. Both motions were overruled by President Judge Hiram H. Keller, who ruled that it was a case for the jury to decide.

Slotter, a son of George Slotter, proprietor of the Fountain House, Doylestown, suffered a serious leg injury on August 5, 1930, which necessitated the expenditure of hospital and doctor bills amounting to over $1300. The boy was in the Abington Memorial and Doylestown Hospitals for many weeks for treatment for a compound fracture of the left leg.

DESCRIBES ICELAND TO TRAVEL CLUB MEMEBRS*Miss Mary Peirce, Haverford,
Is the Speaker
Here*AN INTERESTING TALK

Iceland—that island in the North Atlantic where illiteracy is practically nil, prisons are not needed, and where most cordial welcomes await the travelers in every home, was well described to members of the Travel Club yesterday afternoon by Miss Mary Peirce, of Haverford.

Miss Peirce and her sister, Miss Margaret Peirce, were yesterday garbed after the fashion of the women of Iceland. The picturesque costumes of dark mohair combined one with light blue and the other with green silk claimed the interest of the gathering. Atop the head of each of the travelers was a black velvet cap attached to the back of which were their two long plaits of hair, and from the side of each cap a long silk tassel fell to the shoulder. The garments were enhanced with gilded metal work.

The accounts of their two months' of travel were prefaced by Miss Mary Peirce reading a few verses from "Iceland First Seen."

After their trip from Scotland to Iceland, one week was required to make the journey up the east coast of the northern island. The time of the passage was at a period when the midnight sun was arranged in all its beauty, and no fog was experienced during the entire week. Many ports of call were on the itinerary along this volcanic island.

The multi-colored lava was described by Miss Mary Peirce, who also exhibited vases colored with such. The long, beautiful firths are said to be most attractive, and the manner in which the gulf stream making its way along the west coast of Iceland makes that section a livable place, was told of by the speaker.

The party of tourists was composed of four, guides numbering three, and the entire group requiring five pack ponies, and 20 ponies for riding purposes in order that changes in mounts might be made. During the jaunt the train camped out during two nights; at other times quarters being found in houses along the way. The portions of the country traversed proved most habitable in the river valleys and along the sea coast. Miss Peirce told the women. The boiling mud pits, steelish gray in color; sulphur pits; hot springs and geysers were mentioned. In one spot where the sand along the coast was nearly gold in color, Miss Peirce stated that in the distance the mountains appeared in many pastel shades. The blues of the water were referred to as being especially beautiful. "The glacial rivers also vary in color," stated the Haverford resident, "ranging from dull gray and milky green to other dark shades." Trees in Iceland are said to be not more than 25 or 30 feet in height, the majority rising closely to the ground.

Regarding the education of the inhabitants of that northern clime, and the manner in which they live, Miss Peirce told that: "Illiteracy is practically unheard of; there is but one prison, and that has but a handful of prisoners; the people are versed in the arts, many beautiful paintings and pieces of sculpture being executed

By

SOUTH LANGHORNE, Oct. 30.—A Philadelphia merchant was found dead sitting in his automobile about 150 feet off the Lincoln Highway this morning. Death was due to a pistol shot through the heart from a .35 automatic revolver found in the man's possession.

The man was identified as John Bambach, 51, 430 East Locust street, Germantown.

A large hole in the windshield of had been fired from the outside and at first had been reported that the man had been the victim of highway thugs or else had been taken for a ride. The finding of the revolver inside the car clinched the suicide theory.

The car was parked on the old Lincoln Highway leading into Langhorne east of Janney.

IN AGREEMENTBy "The Stroller"

The other day I wrote in this column about how much I would like to see the name "Bristol" upon the products and the labels of those products of the Manhattan Soap Company.

"Ed" Lynn, manager of the Grand Theatre, has similar desires.

"Ed" says that on Sunday, October 18th, he witnessed an air derby at New York in which bombers and commuters built at the Keystone Aircraft factory here along with other aircraft took part.

"I much regretted that 'Bristol' did not appear on any of the Keystone ships so far as was visible to the spectator."

Yes! We're proud of the products of both the Keystone and Manhattan companies. We're proud that they are made here and we would like the world to know it.

FUTURE OF THE POUND

Monetary standards and rates of exchange exert a direct influence upon world trade, so industrial and financial interests in the United States are still carefully following the situation in England.

Opinion is divided whether England will eventually restore the pound sterling to its former prestige. The gold authorities maintain that the gold standard may soon be restored with the pound marked down below its former value. Two students of British finance say the pound was pegged at too high a rate of exchange.

Between 1918 and 1925 the pound sterling was pushed up to $4.86. It now contains 113 grains of pure gold, a standard at which it has been kept since 1925 only by extraordinary effort and at great cost to British industry. As the country's stores of gold decreased its business was starved to death for lack of money in easy circulation.

Under present conditions it seems likely that the gold sovereign in time will be reissued with considerably less of the precious metal in its composition. The pound would then be worth less in dollars and cents but it would still be worth its weight in gold, which would restore English money to its former prestige in international finance.

Dropping the gold standard has given England only temporary and partial relief. The paper pound of today is worth less than $4 and may go lower.

READ THIS FIRST

Katharine Faring, granddaughter of a Russian prince, is the rightful owner of the missing Czarina rubies of sinister fame and fabulous value. Frying to recover them for her, Paul Trederoff is murdered at Monksilver, a vacant country house, and Frank Severn is kidnapped and carried there unconscious. His servant, Creyke, is murdered.

Jim Wynter, friend of Severn and of Katharine, tries to rescue Severn, injured and drugged; he awakens in the home of mysterious Dr. Martell. Recovering, he takes Katharine and his friends, Mr. and Mrs. Bill Grayson, to Severn's country home, Beggar's Court. There a search reveals a concealed stairway and a locked door in the ruins of an ancient chapel. The stub of one of Dr. Martell's cigars lies on the stairs. Sant, Severn's lawyer, suddenly appears.

NOW GO ON

CHAPTER XXIX

Sant stared, then gave a laugh. "But you aren't serious? Oh, I know Martin's got the wind up about this place. He exaggerates the danger, no doubt—but a lump of solid stone came down zonk close by him one memorable day, and since then he's lived in daily expectation of the whole place collapsing!"

"What's behind that locked door, Sant?" demanded Wynter abruptly. "Blessed if I know! Can't say I am particularly inquisitive, either. A colony of rats, I expect. I've never seen the inside of the crypt and don't know anyone who has. There's been no key so far as I know since I had to do with the place," Sant said. "I once tried some old keys I found in the house. No luck at all."

"You didn't mention this crypt to the police the night Severn disappeared," said Wynter suddenly. "Well, no, frankly, I never thought of it. Not that there would have been much point in doing so, would there, even if I had?"

"Doesn't it strike you as likely that it was here Severn was brought after he'd been kidnapped? We know he wasn't driven away from Beggar's Court till hours later."

Sant had struck a match for a cigarette he had taken from his case, but he forgot to light it as he turned a suddenly startled face towards the other man.

"I hadn't thought of that. But—oh, that's absurd. Must be! That door can't have been opened for years."

A REAL PRISON
"How do we know that? Severn might even have been lying here in the open between these walls, gagged and unable to cry out—and neither the police nor I, only a few yards away, with as much as a suspicion of that doorway. It could hardly have been better hidden if it had been deliberately contrived, could it?" he asked pointedly.

Sant stared at him as if puzzled. "How do you mean, deliberately contrived? Good Lord, Wynter—but of course, you're joking? Just the way the ivy grows—and why shouldn't it? So far as I know no one goes through that doorway once in a blue moon."

Wynter gave a shrug. "Well, someone's been through that doorway and down those steps within the last two or three days, anyway," he retorted. "And I fancy I could put a name to that someone first guess. Sant, why should Martell be interested in this underground door?"

Sant seemed astonished at the point-blank challenge.

"Martell?" he echoed. "But why on earth should you suppose it—or even that Martell has ever been to Beggar's Court?"

"Sant, key or no key, it's got to be opened at once," said Wynter.

hour, Martin protested to the contrary and conjured up a son of his in Buenos Aires as evidence. By the way, has Martin a son in Buenos Aires?"

"Blessed if I know! But I'm getting a bit fogged, Wynter. Do you mean you saw Martell here at Beggar's Court? First I've heard of it."

EVIDENCE
"Oh, Martin says it was a stranger I saw. Meanwhile, I've just come upon this lying here. Wynter showed Sant the cigarette end with an Egyptian name just below the gold tip. When Martell gave me a similar cigarette yesterday, he appeared to think he was about the one person in London who smoked this brand."

Sant stared knowingly at it. Then his face suddenly cleared and he chuckled. "Congratulations on a sound piece of detective work, Wynter. Pity there should be just one flaw in it," he remarked. "One of Martell's cigarettes, no doubt, but—I hate to throw cold water on such deductive brilliance, my dear fellow—unfortunately not smoked or dropped here by Martell!"

"And your reasons?" asked Wynter. "Well, you see, Martell shoved some of those cigarettes into my case yesterday. I'd happened to praise a cigarette of his I was smoking at my place whilst you were upstairs changing. Only hope he didn't think it was a hint," Sant laughed. "This, you have been here since yesterday afternoon?" put in Wynter quickly.

"Good Lord, no! What should bring me to this depressing spot? Though I certainly was at Beggar's Court last night; you see, I had to run down to see the police about poor Creyke. None the less, your discovery is decidedly illuminating." And Sant laughed. "Martell, my dear fellow—what the culprit! I've long suspected Martin of a penchant for my cigarettes, and this proves it—not that I remember leaving my cigarette case lying about. Must have done, I suppose. It wouldn't be the first time. But goodness knows what Martell should have been doing here in these ruins!"

It was a possible explanation, of course. Only in that case Martin must have dropped it either last night or today. And that half-smoked cigarette certainly had the appearance of having been exposed to the weather much longer than that. It was stained as it with damp, and there had been no rain for two days. However, Wynter did not refer to it further.

Describes Iceland To Travel Club Members

there; the Icelanders are noted for their excellent choral singing; they are well versed in manner of tilling the soil, the rhythmic manner in which the raking is done during the laying season being nothing short of beautiful; Iceland has a remarkable literary history; the inhabitants are noted for their weaving and metal-work.

The hospitality shown at the dozens of farm-houses visited as the jaunt of several weeks to many parts of the island was deeply impressed the Misses Peirce. Upon arrival at a home the party was first served with delicious coffee and a large variety of cakes and cookies. Later in the evening, Miss Mary Peirce continued, a bountiful supper was served. On frequent occasions the host and his family would insist on the guests using their beds if there was not a sufficient amount of sleeping space.

Eighty per cent of the income of the Icelanders is gained from the fishing industry, Miss Peirce informed. The fine work done in wool was exhibited in a shawl made in the natural colors. "There are not extremes of wealth or poverty there," she continued. "The people really live off of the land."

This most enlightening and entertaining portion of the program followed the business meeting which was in charge of the president, Mrs. Horace H. Burton. Miss Hilda MacArthur delighted with piano solos.

The program of the afternoon was in charge of Mrs. Armand V. Morris.

Scouts From Bristol To Go Camping at Buccou

Again the opportunity awaits the Boy Scouts of Bristol to spend a week-end at Camp Buccou. November 14 and 15, Saturday and Sunday, have been designated by Scout Headquarters as the lower Bucks district Buccou week-end. The Lower Bucks District includes the territory from Tullytown to Andalusia and the troops that are in the communities within that area have been anxiously looking forward for their opportunity to enjoy the camp site and its camping conveniences.

Week-end camping at Buccou is being held very extensively throughout the county. Under the leadership of the troop commissioners the local troops find it possible to participate. In the lower Bucks district the following troop commissioners will handle their troops in this camping project: David Neill, Bristol 1, 2, 3, 4; Joseph Talbot, Bristol 5, 6, 7; John Field, Bristol 8; Herbert Brambley, Croydon 1, 2; Newportville, 1; Harry Oliver, Cornwells, 1; Andalusia, 1.

This type of camping conducted as it is presents to the boy an opportunity to keep the "out" in Scouting. The cost per boy for this type of week-end camping is practically nil. Each boy brings his own food with him and prepares his meals over a campfire in the woods on the camp site. Transportation to and from Camp Buccou pre-hope of the Scout Council that each sents the greatest problem. It is the troop commissioner will be able to assist his troops get adequate help along this line in order that none are disappointed.

Boy Scouts of Bucks county are distributing thousands upon thousands of posters, cards, and pamphlets telling of the coming maintenance campaign for the American Red Cross. Here in Bristol the distribution is being handled through the troop commissioners, troop committeemen, Scoutmasters and by the boys.

Troop Commissioner David Neill has outlined the territories to be covered in Bristol by Troops 1, 2, 3, 4. Troop Commissioner Joseph Talbot has turned over sufficient Red Cross publicity in Bristol troops, 5, 6, 7, for the sections of the community designated for them to cover. Bristol troop, No. 8, is also aiding in this Red Cross good turn project.

From time to time the Boy Scouts of Bucks County are called upon to render this type of service. The boys always respond to such requests cheerfully. Last spring the Red Cross committee in Bristol were faced with the distribution of thousands of pamphlets containing the President's proclamation for the relief of those stricken in the flooded areas. The answer to the problem was found among the Bristol troops and again the boys went forward and rendered service to their community.

Scout Executive W. F. Livermore, Jr., in connection with the help the Scouts are rendering the American Red Cross, makes the following statement: "The civic service performed by our boys has a definite value in their training in citizenship. Such work that the boys are doing this week throughout the county tends to awaken in them a consciousness of good citizenship. The relationship existing between the Bucks County Council, Boy Scouts of America, and the American Red Cross has always been wholesome and cooperative and the Scout Council is always ready to assist such a worthy organization."

Miss Dorothy Barnfield, of Monroe street; Miss Helen Simons, of Wood street; Robert Campbell and Jack Lynn, of Edgely, motored to Lakehurst on Sunday to see the dirigible.

Mrs. Alvin Leech and daughter, Miss Harriet Leech and Earl Jackson, of Wood street, and Mrs. Mary Hesa, of Bath street, spent Sunday visiting Mr. and Mrs. James Connors, of Florence, N. J.

Stars to Shine in Hallowe'en Grid Classics

KEN MEENAN • ARMENTROUT • BJ VIVIANO • ROBT HORSLEY • BOB MCNAMARA • RALPH HEWITT

If one were the possessor of a magic carpet, providing the means of instantaneous transition from one spot in these United States to another, what a day of football one would be privileged to enjoy on October 31! Notre Dame vs. Carnegie Tech., at South Bend, Ind., is easily the pick of the scheduled games. At their last meeting the Irish trounced Carnegie 26-6, but then they had the one and only "Rock." This year, however, Tom Yarr has proved himself a captain worthy of the name, and a lively duel is anticipated between Yarr and Captain Murray ArmentROUT of the Techmen. Next in attractiveness is the Illinois-Northwestern game at Evanston, Ill. Last year Northwestern ran up a 32-0 score against Illinois, and this season, with Ken Meenan as a threat, they hope to repeat. Robert Horsley, Illinois 150-pound sensation, is expected to be in the line-up. The big game in the East will be at New York between Oregon and N. Y. U., when Bob McNamara, of the latter, will strut his stuff. Great things are expected of Bob. Columbia and Cornell at Ithaca ought also to prove a game thronged with action. In their last meeting Cornell won a 10-7 victory, but this year Columbia looks to Ralph Hewitt to prevent another defeat. His chief barrier will be B. J. Viviano, of Cornell, called the best halfback since the days of Kew and Pfano.
